(The) O-gre does what ogres can, Deeds quite impossible for Man. But one prize is beyond his reach: The Ogre cannot master speech. About a subdued plain, Among it's desperate and slain, The Ogre stalks with hands on hips, While dribble gushes from his lips. (The)

(on a poem by W.H. Auden)