A "Tenney mode," in this case, is a time-variant statistical distribution of pitch classes. When a pitch class is selected (stochastically), its probability drops to zero and increments gradually over subsequent notes.

(This example is written in Java, using Nick Didkovsky's JMSL, and my probabilistic mode library.)